

Example of Cell Density and Catalyst Purification Characteristics (Attained Exhaust Gas Purification Efficiency)

Cell density is an important factor when designing catalysts. By increasing the cell density, it is possible to support demanding purification efficiency, and by reducing the cell density, performance can be ensured within a limited pressure loss range.
Please contact us for details.